WHY CLIMATE AND ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGNERS HAVE A COMMON CAUSE (BY CHRIS COPPOCK)

- CC doesn't respect borders: tackling it depends on international co-operation, not competition or conflict.
- The colossal financial and human resources wasted on weapons and warfare could instead go to combat or ameliorate CC. In the UK for example, as military budgets increase overseas aid is cut.
- The scramble for fossil fuels drives great-power tensions, e.g. Arctic Ocean, pipeline routes anywhere and arguably the war in Ukraine.
- Fossil-fuel producing states often lack human rights/democracy, with troops used to suppress unrest e.g. the Gulf states, Iran.
- In poor countries CC impacts (e.g. drought or floods) cause displacement, tension and war. The former colonial powers (e.g. UK, US or France in C. Africa) respond with special forces, drones and securitizing our borders against refugees. "National security" trumps human security.
- Militaries have huge C-footprint even when not at war—estimated at 6% of the global total—yet this is excluded from C-accounting (e.g. Paris Agreement) and poorly reported if at all. The US military (over 800 bases worldwide, 13 in Britain) is the world's largest C-emitter and a major polluter. The F35-A fighter now arriving (with new US nuclear bombs) at "RAF" Lakenheath, Suffolk, burns an unprecedented 1,480 gallons per hour. "Greening" the military, if at all, is purely for tactical advantage.
- Wars—including post-war reconstruction--greatly increase the C-footprint, also pollution and ecosystem disruption.
- Even a "limited" or "localized" nuclear war (the 40 x 100kT warheads on one UK Trident sub are enough) could cause massive CC by injecting soot into the stratosphere and wrecking the ozone layer. Global average temperatures could drop eight degrees (a "nuclear winter") crippling global food production so billions—if they survived—would starve.

(Nuclear power is not the answer: it was developed to provide weapons-grade material and requires military-style security.)
